Preliminary Assessment Handbook

Relationship manager quick guide - demo version

This PDF is fully synthetic and intended only for demo use in a lightweight Business Q&A; Assistant. It does not describe any real bank, institution, customer, or product.

Purpose. This handbook gives a compact, human-readable reference for how an advisor can form a preliminary view using the demo products and the sample customer portfolio. It supports discussion only and must not be interpreted as a lending decision.

1. Scope

Use this guide when a user asks product- or policy-oriented questions such as what a product is intended for, which basic signals matter, or how a cautious preliminary answer should be framed.

The guide is intentionally lightweight. It focuses on a few recurring themes: product purpose, minimum screening checks, caution flags, and uncertainty handling.

2. Product summaries

FlexLine Demo

A short-term working capital product intended for established businesses that need flexibility around timing gaps in operating cash flow.

- Typical use cases include seasonal inventory purchases, temporary supplier prepayments, and uneven timing between expenses and customer receipts.
- A preliminary positive view is stronger when the business has at least two years of operating history, current financials are available, and no unresolved tax arrears are present.
- Repeated payment delays do not automatically rule out discussion, but they reduce support and should be mentioned explicitly.

InvoiceBridge Demo

A receivables-oriented product for businesses whose invoicing is mainly business-to-business and follows normal payment terms.

- It is most credible when a substantial share of revenue comes from B2B invoicing and the receivables cycle is visible in the sample data.
- Consumer-heavy businesses are usually a weak fit.
- If one buyer represents a large share of revenue, concentration risk should be called out instead of presenting a clean positive view.

AssetGrow Demo

An investment-oriented product for equipment, machinery, and similar operational assets.

- Preliminary support is strongest when the company has at least three years in operation, positive EBITDA, and a reasonable equity ratio.
- Weak profitability or high leverage should push the answer toward a cautious or partial view.

3. Support labels

Answers should be framed using one of three support labels. These labels help the user understand whether the response is grounded directly in the synthetic material or whether key evidence is missing.

- Directly supported - the answer follows clearly from the demo documents and, where needed, from the structured customer data.
- Partially supported - there is some evidence, but one or more caution flags or borderline indicators reduce confidence.
- Not enough information - one or more key facts are missing, so the assistant should avoid filling gaps with assumptions.

> Recommended wording: 'Based on the provided demo policy and the sample customer data, this appears broadly aligned at a preliminary level.' When caution flags are present, mention them directly rather than smoothing them away.

4. Frequent caution flags

- Latest financial statements are missing.
- Unresolved tax arrears are present.
- Payment delays have been repeated rather than occasional.
- Debt to EBITDA appears high relative to the simplified policy threshold.
- For InvoiceBridge Demo, a single customer appears to dominate revenue.

5. Reading customer examples

A few examples from the demo portfolio illustrate the intended pattern of reasoning.

- Harbor Foods Demo Oy looks like a comparatively clean InvoiceBridge Demo case because B2B invoicing is high, latest financials are available, and tax arrears are not present.
- Aurora Mock Services Oy is weaker for FlexLine Demo because the equity ratio is below the simplified threshold, even though revenue is established and tax arrears are not present.
- Bright Forge Test Ltd should not receive a confident positive fit statement because unresolved tax arrears are present despite otherwise acceptable profitability.
- Maple Works Mock Ltd is a good example of a 'not enough information' answer because latest financial statements are missing.

6. Final note

The assistant should present these assessments as decision support only. It should not imply approval, decline, or production-grade risk analysis.
